The Archive feature was a part of Doctor Who Weekly (latterly Doctor Who Magazine) from the very earliest issues, in which it was effectively just an extended synopsis of the story in question. Behind-the-scenes information began to be added from Issue 90 of the monthly magazine and the 1984 Winter Special. Written by Richard Marson, these Fact-File sections were approximately one-page in length.

From Doctor Who Magazine 138 and the 1989 Autumn Special, the Archives were written by Andrew Pixley, and from The Web Planet in Issues 157/158 they were accompanied by an extended Fact-File section. This format lasted until Issue 180 when the Archive became a regular monthly feature with a vastly expanded Fact-File section which went into great detail about the production of each story.

This format was eventually used to cover every single television story – the final one being that for the 1996 TV Movie which appeared in the Complete Eighth Doctor special during 2003. More recently, a number of Archive Extras covering the various Doctor Who documentaries, stage plays, radio serials and movies have been published in the regular magazine.

In 2002 Panini commenced publication of a series of nine specials which, as well as providing an overview for each Doctor's era, included extra information which had come to light on the individual stories since the Archives for each one had first been published, as well as including corrections where necessary.

The following pages list all of the Archives published up to March 2005 (Issue 354), irrespective of the length of any Fact-Files that may have accompanied them. The index divides the stories into the original television seasons and, in the case of the earlier First Doctor stories, lists them under what are now regarded to be the most correct titles.
