

I was thinking... This is a really nice gazebo, but something is missing...

What it could do with - right here - is a gargoyle. Or better still, a girlgoyle

To make a girlgoyle:
Borrow a girl. Ballet classes are good places to find them.
(Check that their Papa doesn't mind; they usually don't as long as you promise to bring them back in good condition.)

Trick her into sitting still for three minutes while you take a cast of her face.

Use the cast to make a plaster version of her face, then modify it with modelling clay.

Take a cast of the modified face.

Melt some lead and pour it into the cast to make a nice, weatherproof girlgoyle.

(Make sure the girl stands well clear for this operation.)

Return the girl to its owner and hang the girlgoyle in position.

Spot on, I'd say.
